

Government to Blame

“The New Zealand Government has only itself to blame for criticism over its lack of action on global warming”, says Robin Grieve chairman of F.A.R.M

Criticism of the Government’s declaration of a climate emergency as virtue signaling and empty words by Greta Thunberg is an example of the chickens coming home to roost for politicians who have failed to stand up for New Zealand against international bullying on climate action.

Instead of standing up for our Country our leaders adopted a system of quantifying our emissions of ruminant Methane which has no scientific integrity and misrepresents the impact ruminant Methane emissions have on global temperatures.

The result is New Zealand’s per capita emissions are overstated and our country’s contribution to global emissions is not a fair reflection of our position.

Our leaders have been pathetic in the way they have failed to tell New Zealand’s story which is that while agricultural emissions are a major part of our emissions profile, this is a reflection of a faulty system, and not reality, as most of our agricultural emissions are of ruminant Methane which in its current steady state of emission is not causing any increase in atmospheric greenhouse gas.

New Zealand politicians will never appease the Thunberg’s of the world who are beyond reason and should not bother. They should stand up for the people they represent, tell our story and the plot our own course which is in the best interests of New Zealand.

Robin Grieve

Chairman F.A.R.M.

Facts About Ruminant Methane

0274795663

rrgrieve@xtra.co.nz

www.farmemissions.co.nz